

MAAC Studio are delighted to be working with Impact Hub Inverness in Balmacara, to explore options for breathing new life into the Old Mill Hall for the local community.

MAAC Studio are conservation architects that specialise in the restoration of traditional and historic buildings in the Highlands. Working with traditional buildings requires an approach that is different to that of modern buildings. MAAC Studio's skill and expertise in traditional materials will guide the transformation of this 200 year old building and ensure that it is able to serve the community for another 200 years.

As well as looking at the activities that could take place in the building, the design team will explore opportunities to deliver a low carbon solution that will reduce running costs and help to tackle climate change.

Head of the team, Calum Maclean is passionate about the historic architecture of the Highlands. He is author of "The Architecture of Inverness" and is currently researching a new book on the life and work of Alexander Ross, the renowned Victorian architect who worked on many building in Kyle and Lochalsh for Alexander Matheson.
